A national conference on Nutrition in Cancer, cosponsored by the American Cancer Society and the National Cancer Institute, will be held June 29 through July 1, 1978, at the Washington Plaza Hotel, Seattle, Washington. The conference is designed to inform the medical community of recent developments in the role of nutrition in cancer, and attendance is open to students and members of the medical professions as well as those in health-related professions concerned with nutritional aspects of patient care. Among the topics to be discussed during the various sessions are: Mechanism of Action of Diet as a Carcinogen; Pediatric Considerations and Malnutrition and Death; Principles of Nutritional Support; and Nutrients, Vitamins, and Minerals in Prevention. The conference is accredited by the American Medical Association, the American Academy of Family Physicians, and the American Osteopathic Association. There is no registration fee, but advance registration is requested. For further information write: Dr. Sidney L. Arje, American Cancer Society—National Cancer Institute, National Conference on Nutrition in Cancer, 777 Third Avenue, New York, New York 10017.
