THE DENTIST VS. CANCER

There is a vital role for the dentist in the control of cancer. His routine practice makes possible a thorough oral examination for each of his patients. He can thus discover premalignant lesions and early cancer, leading to prompt treatment with a high potential for cure.

Oral cancer is receiving more and more attention from the dental profession and from the American Cancer Society...at dental symposia and meetings across the country, at many of which the Society provides exhibits and publications...with Society clinical fellowship grants to dentists...through the participation of more and more dentists in the Society's local boards and committees...through the helpful guidance given to the Society's professional films and other materials on oral cancer.

It is through these working partnerships...between dentists and the American Cancer Society...that advances against this disease will continue to be made.
